

Top 6 Videos for Social Learning

Wordless short films can be used to address so many goals! These videos are just a few of our favorites for addressing making predictions and inferences, understanding body language and facial expressions, and problem solving. You might also use these for story-retelling and other language-based goals! More stories and short films will be reviewed in our course, Using Media to Support Social Learning.

**Always preview videos before showing them to your students**

Snack Attack

This is an all-time favorite! It's great for making smart guesses, discussing body language, and multiple perspectives of a situation.

Gopher Broke

Kids always find this one to be hilarious. It's about a gopher who is looking for a snack and experiences a few problems along the way. It's great for making smart guesses and discussing facial expressions.

One Man Band

This one is about two musicians who compete for one coin from a little girl. It's great for making predictions and discussing body language. You can also use this one to talk about "one-upping."

Glued

This one is great for talking about emotions, body language/facial expressions, and making smart guesses. It's about a boy who is addicted to screens and his mother's attempts to get him to play outside on a nice day.

Soar

This short film covers all the emotions. It's great for talking about body language/facial expressions, making smart guesses, and problem solving.

The Wish Granter

This one is about a fantasy land underground with creatures who grant wishes. It follows these two lovebirds and I love to use this one around Valentine's Day!
